

WATER EASE FOR CHRISTMAS TREES

ABSTRACT

An apparatus for watering Christmas trees includes a bottle defining a reservoir and having an opening for allowing fluid to travel outwardly through an elongated flexible hose attached thereto. The apparatus further includes an elongated rigid tube engageable with the hose and a basin housing a tree. The apparatus further includes a stand for supporting the bottle thereon and at an inverted position. The stand includes a top member having a substantially annular portion for receiving the bottle therein and for allowing the tube to be selectively positioned therethrough. The stand further includes a plurality of fastening members for selectively engaging the top member and the base member with each other.